Introduction

Pre labour rupture of membranes (PROM) is the term used when your waters have broken prior to your labour starting. This means that the protective sac of fluid around your baby, now has a hole in it that is allowing the water to drain away. Most women go into labour soon after their waters break. 60% of women go into labour naturally within 24 hours. 91% of women go into labour naturally within 48 hours.

If you are more than 37 weeks pregnant and your waters break but you do not go into labour, you will be offered immediate induction of labour or conservative management for a period of 24 hours.

Conservative management will be offered if you don't show any signs of infection where an appointment to come for induction of labour approximately 24 hours later will be given. This is because there is a small risk of an infection developing in the amniotic fluid surrounding your baby. This may affect you and/or your baby. As the length of time between your waters breaking and your baby being born increases so does the likelihood of an infection developing.

At York and Scarborough Hospitals induction of labour can be offered immediately or as soon as labour ward are able to facilitate or from 24 hours after your waters have broken. Your baby will be closely monitored in labour and following the birth if your waters have been broken for longer than 24 hours. This is to monitor for any signs of infection and for this it would be recommended that you and your baby remain in hospital for 24 hours following the birth.

What happens next?

It is safe for you to go home after your waters have broken, to wait for your labour to start.

You may find that you are not at home for a long time before you start contracting regularly and need to return to the hospital. Or you may remain at home until you have agreed with your midwife to return to the hospital for your labour to be induced.

Your midwife may advise you to remain and mobilise around the hospital if you are already having regular contractions.

What do I need to do at home?

- Monitor the colour of your waters. Your waters should be clear/pink coloured.
- Monitor your temperature every 4 hours whilst you are awake. Your midwife will give you some thermometers to take home.
- Monitor your baby's movements. Your baby should continue to move as normal once your waters have broken and when you are having contractions.
- You can eat and drink as normal. It is really important that you drink plenty to remain hydrated.
- You can have a bath or shower with plain water. Do not add any bubble bath or oils to the water.
- Avoid sexual intercourse.
- Remain as active as possible; this will encourage your contractions to start.

When do I need to contact the hospital?

- When you are having regular, painful contractions.
- If your waters change colour. Your waters should be clear/pink coloured. Contact the hospital if your waters are green or brown coloured, or if you are bleeding.
- If your waters have an unpleasant smell.
- If your temperature is above 37.5°C.
- If you feel unwell.
- If you are worried about your baby's movements.
- If you have constant severe abdominal pain.
- If you have any other concerns or questions.
